Gold Miners Don't Know Precious Ore When They See It

Lead, S. D.—A gold miner is about as likely to see an elephant underground as he is gold. And if he did see it he probably wouldn't recognize it.

This is one of the oddities of digging out the yellow metal that gives the soldiers at Fort Knox something to guard and provides the nation's dentists something with which to fill a tooth.

"It is very rare to find free specks of gold," said Harlan Walker, assistant general manager of the Homestake mine, largest in the Americas." A miner can work years here and never see any."

Many miners cannot even determine ore-bearing rock from waste or "country" rock." Sites worth working are outlined by skilled mining engineers.

Gold mining is an intricate industry comparable in many ways to an automobile factory. It takes many skills to glean from one ton of ore its final product—barely enough gold to make a man's wedding ring. And it may cost $200 to $00 or more to blast through country rock to reach an ore body worth working.

Waste Is Returned

Practically everything taken out of the mine is put back in with one noteworthy exception, the gold. After the ore has been crushed and passed through meshes of a screen finer than the sifting cloth used in flour mills, the waste sand is pumped back into the mine as "fill" to prevent wall collapses.

Gold miners are a hardy, snuff-chewing crew who hold a high disdain for coal mines. They work a seven-hour, six-day week and the top workers earn $12 to $15 a day. They live a mile above sea level here and work a mile from their homes—straight down. Their chief task is drilling seven-foot holes in the tunnel face and stuffing them with dynamite which they set off at the end of their shift. Laborers then do the mucking—loading the blasted ore with power shovels.

At present the gold mining industry in the United States is in a slump. The Homestake mine is operating at only about 60 per cent capacity.

Production Declines

"Before the war the United States produced 14 per cent of the world's gold each year," Walker said. "Now it produces only about 5 per cent.

"The reasons? The present ceiling price on gold, shortage of labor, higher costs and high taxes."

It takes 20 days and incredible labor to harvest from 35 tons of undug ore in the mine the one pound or less of gold bullion that emerges from the refinery. But Walker is weary of people who say, "Why go to all that trouble? It is just taken out of one hole here and put back into another hole at Fort Knox."

His reply: "If the gold wasn't mined the country would soon find out how important it is. It has many industrial uses—and there never was a nation that felt it had enough for money."

One indication of its value: they can burn the suit of coveralls worn by a refinery worker here and recover enough gold dust to buy three new suits.

Modern Thoreau Lives in Hills On $500 a Year

CUSTER, S. D.—Badger Clark, a bearded poet-philosopher of the Black Hills, has never let love, mankind or money stand between him and his life's aim — a quiet quest for God.

"The Badger" is a tall, distinguished man with a Vandyke beard who wears a flowing green necktie, forest green jacket, whipcord breeches and polished riding boots. For 25 years he has lived alone and liked it in a "cabin with four rooms and a path" he largely built himself in Custer state park. He pays $10 a year ground rent and hasn't held a steady job for 43 years—since he was 22.

"The birds make a cloud about my head when I step outside," he said.

Badger has written 250 poems and 30 short stories. He is a kind of western style Rudyard Kipling and at least two of his "verses"—as he prefers to call them—have become national anthology favorites. They are "The Job" and "The Cowboy's Prayer."

Lives on $500 a Year

His books have brought him little money, however, and for many years he said he had been earning his way "by my jaw." By this he meant the speeches he makes to banquets, women's clubs and high school and college groups. He doesn't seek out these engagements. People come to him.

"I've shucked off the things I don't need," he said. "I believe that by reducing life to its simple terms you get more out of it. It's like chewing a crust of dry bread. A hungry man finds in it all the flavor he needs.

"I believe with Thoreau that a man is rich in proportion to the number of things he can afford to let alone.

"I can live on $500 a year comfortably today—even on $400. I can't stand to be in debt and won't be. If I want something and can't pay for it, I do without it until I can. The only thing I have against poverty is that I can't afford all the wonderful books I'd like to have."

Cooks His Meals

Clark bathes in a washtub, cooks his own meals and eats only twice a day to cut down on the time required by housekeeping chores. His cabin, kept spotlessly neat, is lighted by a kerosene lamp. It has no telephone, no radio.

The Badger likes individual people but dislikes cities. He goes to town only once every two weeks to buy supplies and stays only a couple of hours.

Clark at 65 is still a handsome man. I asked him why he had never married.

"I am very frank about my income," he smiled. "That does the trick."

Dog Rides in Stroller To Get Inoculation

MEMPHIS, TENN.—All sorts of dogs came to be inoculated against rabies in a Shelby county drive. But only one came in a baby stroller.

Mrs. Robert E. Harpst, who was registering dogs in one of the dozen emergency veterinarian clinics, was surprised to see the dog sitting comfortably in the stroller with a woman alongside.

"He wouldn't walk," the woman told Mrs. Harpst, "so I rolled him over for his vaccination."

Texans Seek Vets' Criticism Of Their State—and Get It!

MADISONVILLE, TEX.—Members of the Madisonville Sidewalk Cattlemen's association are plowing through big stacks of mail, looking for insults and finding plenty.

The sidewalk cattlemen announced a nation-wide contest. They are searching for the out-of-state veteran, trained in Texas, who has the worst opinion of the Lone Star state. They want to bring him back on a big, free trip and show him that Texas, in peace time, isn't a bad place at all.

Contest letters are piling up and the cattlemen, patriotic Texans all, are reading them with grim, set faces.

Here are samples:

"First contest I ever heard of where the winner loses," a Los Angeles veteran wrote. "Who'd want to go back to Texas?"

The wife of an Ohio veteran said: "My husband says in the next war he'll take his basic training at the battlefront and then, if ordered, move up to Texas."

"We're going to bring the winner back and let him see Texas without the burden of army camps life," the cattlemen say. "Any place looks better from a motor car window than it does from a field post and army camps weren't located for scenic reasons."

Nevada Warns Gamblers To Keep Games Honest

CARSON CITY, NEV.—A Nevada tax commissioner warned gambling houses today to "put square dice and new decks on the tables."

William J. Moore, gambling representative on the state tax commission, issued the warning to casino operators in the Lake Tahoe resort area.

He said that with the summer tourist season approaching the tax commission would put investigators in the field to see that all gambling, which is legal in Nevada, was honest.

Moore, whose Last Frontier hotel is the biggest gambling casino in Las Vegas, issued his warning to Lake Tahoe gamblers in person.

Calling them in for a conference, he told them:

"The dice and the wheels already carry large enough percentages for the house. You do all right without increasing the percentage."

Skipper Sights Gigantic Sea Monster—On Whiskey Run Reef

EMPIRE, ORE.—Ben Tanner, skipper of the trailer Gold Coast, said that a monster approached his boat, smacked its lips, rolled it long-lashed eyes, pointed its tail in the air and dived straight down.

Tanner's experience jibed with other recent reports of "sea monsters" in the area. Scientists say the monster probably is a sea elephant, rarely seen in these parts.

In any event, Tanner said, sighting of the monster had nothing to do with the name of the habitat—Whiskey Run reef.

Colorado Wants Zeb Pike's Bones For Peak, or Bust

COLORADO SPRINGS, COLO.—The war between the city of Colorado Springs and Sackets Harbor, N. Y., over the remains of Zebulon Pike is still going strong.

The latest development was a scornful rejection by Colorado Springs of a Sackets Harbor peace offer. The upper New York state town has suggested that Colorado Springs accept a small box of earth from Pike's grave and forget about its plan to install the general's remains under a monument on Pike's peak.

Mayor J. N. McCullough of Colorado Springs made the rejection official when he said:

"Pike's peak is a God given monument for the general—and it's the place where he ought to be buried."

Doug Crouch, president of the chamber of commerce, was a little more emphatic.

It's Pike—or Bust

"We want to bring the general home and we don't want any dirt," he said. "The boys set out to get Pike and that's what we're going to do."

The Colorado campaign to remove Pike's remains from the military cemetery at Sackets Harbor where he is buried and give the famed general a final resting place atop the peak he discovered, gathered new momentum with receipt of the Sackets Harbor offer.

The offer of Sackets Harbor earth was made in a letter to the Denver Post from E. W. Dennison, assistant postmaster of the upper New York state town. Dennison sent—under separate cover—a three-inch square box containing a sample of earth he was talking about.

A reporter who looked inside said it appeared that General Pike now was buried under somewhat rocky soil. The sample was full of pebbles.

Secretary Expresses Thanks

Howard N. Yates, secretary of the Colorado Springs chamber of commerce, was the only man in town who even suggested the box of earth might be welcome.

"Tell the man thanks," he asked. "We can plant that as seed and orient the ground so the general will feel right at home when he gets here."

Yates said he was sure the Pike mounment plan would succeed and predicted the army soon would okay the move.

Crouch regarded the Sackets Harbor letter as an insult however.

"That guy is trying to be funny," he said. "It's silly to think we'd take dirt instead of bones."

But it wasn't funny to Asst. Postmaster Dennison of Sackets Harbor, who wrote the letter and sent the box.

"Anything we can do to help Colorado we are willing to do—except to surrender the remains of Gen. Pike," he said. "We are a little hamlet, but we hold to our historical past and we want the general here, because he sailed from here to his death at the battle of York."

Dennison added a P. S. to his letter. "I was in Denver 40 years ago," it said. "The only activity I saw was Market street."

Contractor Agitates Paint With Wife's Washing Machine

TRENTON, N. J.—Thanks to his wife's washing machine, a Trenton contractor is putting a new coat of paint on the 720-foot Delaware river bridge between Milford, N. J., and upper Black Eddy, Pa.

The Delaware river joint toll bridge commission hired Dewey D'Agostino to paint the superstructure, specifying that the paint must be mixed daily by an agitator. But agitators, D'Agostino found, are not to be had.

D'Agostino, who once had to find a non-union midget to paint the understructure of another bridge, applied his ingenuity and appropriated his wife's washing machine. The job is proceeding on schedule.

What of Mrs. D'Agostino? "It cost me $400 for a new machine for her," D'Agostino said.

Picture Shows Woodrow Wilson Liked Nicknames

MIDDLETOWN, CONN. — Woodrow Wilson, like President Roosevelt, apparently liked to tag his associates with nicknames.

Such sobriquets as "Redhead," "Winch," "Yan Benny," "Our Bobs," and "Little Billee," were conferred by the scholarly Wilson on men with high sounding titles and degrees who served with him on the Wesleyan university faculty. That was back in the '80s.

The nicknames appear in Wilson's handwriting above each faculty member on a composite picture just discovered by the university. Wilson designated himself "Woodrow."

At the bottom he wrote: "The faculty with less deadwood than any faculty of my acquaintance. Woodrow Wilson."

The composite picture was among a group of Wesleyan photographs donated to the university by George W. Davison, New York banker, a Wesleyan alumnus and trustee.
